Third Instalment

Seating themselves
on one of the benches they began to talk to each other.
James told of town life in Forestvill and Fred of the great city.
Fred was much interested in James description of Forestvill and expressed his wish to live in a small town
but said that he could not get along in a small town because there were no papers
to sell on street

corners there and he had never had experience at any thing else.

Jim said he should come next month
(August) and pay him
a visit at any rate
and Jim would try and get him a place. It was now time for James train and the two parted.
Fred had promised to make him a visit and try for a job in Forestvill.
Friday dawned nice
and bright and Fred packed a small trunk which old Jim possessed and if poor Fred only knew held a great

secretly for him.
 The boy who had bargained to move Freds trunk was at the door. Fred had planned to move, he had found a place with one of his friends George Steves, George mother was a widow and George was small and not very well so they had decided to take in a boarder on two. The house was small and only had two bedrooms so Fred and George left in one room
